PREFACE

The 1939 Register provides a snapshot of the civilian population of England and Wales just after the outbreak of the Second World War.

As the 1931 census for England and Wales was destroyed by fire during the Second World War and no census was taken in 1941, the Register provides the most complete survey of the population of England and Wales between 1921 and 1951, making it an invaluable resource for family, social and local historians.

The 1939 Register was designed to capture the details of every member of the civilian population on a specific date – military personnel were not recorded (see below for more information on who was and wasn't recorded). It contains details of around 40 million people, recorded in more than 65,000 volumes (transcript books).

While the 1939 Register is not a census, it is arranged along similar lines and includes similar, if less detailed, information. It does, however, show exact dates of birth where census returns simply give a person's age.

Records do not include the civilian populations of:

- the Channel Islands
- the Isle of Man
- Scotland)
- Northern Ireland

Exceptions and anomalies among armed forces personnel

Registration of members of the armed forces was dealt with by the military authorities, so the 1939 Register does not include service personnel in military, naval and air force establishments. Nor does it include members of the armed forces billeted in private homes, including their own homes. However, since conscription did not begin in earnest until January 1940, most people who subsequently served in the armed forces during the Second World War were still civilians in September 1939.

The records do include

- members of the armed forces on leave
- civilians on military bases

The information recorded for each individual

For each individual the following details are included:

- address
- schedule number
- sub number
- surname
- first name(s)
- role (for institutions only – Officer, Visitor, Servant, Patient, Inmate)
- gender
- date of birth
- marital status

- occupation

How the Register was compiled and arranged

Information is arranged by:

- enumeration district – each enumeration district has a unique four- or five-letter code, and large enumeration districts may comprise more than one book
- household or institution – each household or institution is represented by a schedule number. A large institution such as a hospital may be an enumeration district in its own right
- national registration number – each person is represented by a sub-number within the household or institution

When preparing the Register, the General Register Office used the plans already in place for what would have been the 1941 Census. It was based on registration districts and sub-districts, and was administered by Superintendent Registrars and Registrars of Births and Deaths.

The enumeration districts used for the Register were based broadly on those used for the 1931 Census, adjusted to account for the population movements since 1931. They were sub-divided into smaller units for National Registration purposes. The general rule was that an enumeration district should contain no more than 300 households, not counting institutions.

The final arrangement of the Register was not by registration district, as in a census, but according to the boundaries of local government units. These were the bodies responsible for the Local National Registration Offices and Food Offices, who maintained and updated information in the Register. These were County Boroughs, Municipal Boroughs, Urban Districts and Rural Districts, except in London which was made up of Metropolitan Boroughs and the Cities of London and Westminster. For more information about enumeration districts and area codes.

This Register was to be a critical tool in coordinating the war effort at home. It would be used to issue identity cards, organize rationing, and more. On September 1st, 1939 Germany invaded Poland, putting the wheels in motion for Britain to declare war on the 3rd.

the 1939 Register was made available for the very first time on the 2nd of November 2015. It is the most comprehensive survey ever taken of the civil population of England and Wales.
